1. It is becoming increasingly evident that American dependence on foreign oil, especially oil from countries that support and/or export radical Islamic ideology and terrorism, provides a considerable market for oil. While there are many alternative energy sources, none provide any significant energy for the transportation sector, at least in the following period of time. Oil dependence has been a major factor in the development of the transportation sector, but neither alternative energy sources nor alternative transportation modes have been able to displace each of the other. We must find a way to get away from foreign oil dependence.

a. The Energy Independence and Security Act of 2007 requires that 15% of the vehicles warranted to operate on gasoline, ethanol, and methanol, or be warranted to operate on biodiesel, be flex-fuel vehicles. This requirement is being phased in over the next 10 years. The Department of Energy is currently working on a rulemaking process to determine the specific requirements for flex-fuel vehicles.
